Library of Amherst College.

The late Prof. Edward Tuckerman made a choice collection of books and papers relating to Lichens, some four hundred numbers in all, which has been presented by Mrs. Tuckerman, in accordance with his own wish, to Amherst College Library. It is proposed to keep the collection by itself under the name of the "Tuckerman Memorial Library," and to make it worthy of the name, by making it as complete as possible in its own department. Supposing that some persons interested in this specialty might like to assist in maintaining and completing the collection (with the understanding that it is always available to public use,) I wish to give opportunity for any who care to do so to contribute, either in money or in material (especially rare monographs that may have escaped Prof. Tuckerman's notice), to this memorial to a model scholar and scientist. Whatever money may be contributed will be kept as a fund of which only the icome will be employed in making additions to the collection, or in repairs and rebinding. The sum of 1000 Dollars would probably suffice as such a fund.
